She recently shared her insight on her blog and I thought I'd share it here, too. There's a phrase that's spoken with some regularity as a parenting-moment: "Don't make any more clutter for me!" And, of course, what's "clutter"? Is it just a term that means "more stuff"? I don't think so. In fact, I believe clutter is anything that doesn't belong in our home - whatever it is. That includes stuff that you think is "necessary" but it really isn't - like all the dishes in the kitchen sink because "out of sight, out of mind". Clutter is even stuff that you don't know you have. If you don't know it's there, then why do you have it? Clutter comes in many forms. Clutter is anything that is taking up space and/or attention that should be saved for the things you really need to be saving them for: Your family. Your home. The world. Here are just a few things that clutter can be: Clutter is anything taking up space and/or attention that needs to be
